The French and Indian War, a distant part of the wider Seven Years War, was of great interest to Europeans. Political maps, battle maps and maps of forts and other military sites, were issued as separate sheets, in atlases and in "gentleman's magazines." This lecture will chronicle these maps, giving us a look at how contemporary Europeans understood the events across the Atlantic.

Christopher W. Lane is the owner of the Philadelphia Print Shop West, a Denver antique map and print gallery. In his over three decades in the business, Chris has written many catalogues, articles and books on related topics, including on his particular interest in cartographic myths. Chris has lectured widely, including several series of talks at the Denver Public Library. He has appeared for 20 years as a map and print expert on PBS's Antiques Roadshow.
